CASS LAKE, MN- Earlier this month, Tribal, State and Federal Officials along with Tribal Veterans and their families, gathered at the future site of the Tribal Veterans Cemetery for a groundbreaking and blessing event.

The ground blessing ceremony was performed by Leech Lake Elder Mike Smith and his son, Michael Smith Jr. The Leech Lake Honor Guard and the Cass Lake American Legion posted colors for the event.

The public ceremony continued at the Vets Building in Cass Lake with remarks delivered by George D. Eisenbach Jr., Director, Veterans Cemetery Grants program; Leroy Staples Fairbanks III, District III Representative; Rich Robinson, on behalf of the Robinson Family; Andrew Martin for Senator Amy Klobuchar; Pete Makowski for Senator Al Franken; Tom Whiteside for Congressman Rick Nolan and MN State Representative (5A) Matt Bliss. MN State Senator Justin Eichorn was also scheduled to speak but did not attend.

"All of us associated with the Veterans Cemetery Grants Program and your project, take genuine concern and pride in the establishment of the Tribal Veterans cemetery on Tribal Government lands. They offer a focal point for remembering those who have worn the cloth of the nation. Moreover, they provide a record for future generations to learn from. This land is where your warriors were born and where their stories begin to take shape and this cemetery is where they will return when life's battles are done," said George D. Eisenbach Jr, Veterans Cemetery Grants program Director in his remarks. He continued "Each one of the headstones and markers is going to tell a story. That's history for your youth, history to keep your culture alive. So make sure you bring your children and grandchildren, your sons and daughters, to teach them that freedom isn't free".

Attendees enjoyed lunch and refreshments immediately following the program.

The Tribal Veterans Cemetery will be constructed at the Veterans Memorial Grounds in Cass Lake, MN. In 2012 the Rosebud Sioux tribe was the first sovereign tribal nation to receive grant funding from this program. In addition to Leech Lake, the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe was also awarded a grant to fund a veterans cemetery in North Dakota during this years funding cycle.

A $3.3 million federal grant received last month from the Veteran's Administration Veterans Cemetery Grants Program will fund a main entrance, a combined administration and maintenance facility, roads, an assembly area, a committal shelter, 419 casketed sites, 32 cremains gravesites, 64 columbarium niches, a memorial wall, a memorial walk, landscaping, and supporting infrastructure. The project will develop nearly three acres of land and is expected to serve approximately 3,000 tribal veterans and their families.

Shingobee on the Bay Kicks Off Grand Opening Weekend With Ribbon Cutting Ceremony

By Michael Chosa

WALKER, MN- Members of the Leech Lake Tribal Council, Leech Lake Gaming, Shingobee on the Bay Staff and others gathered on Friday October 13 for the official Grand Opening.

Following a traditional pipe and drum ceremony, guests heard from Leech Lake Tribal Chairman Faron Jackson Sr., District III Representative LeRoy Staples Fairbanks III, Gaming Director Mike Auger, Leech Lake Chamber of Commerce President/CEO Cindy Wannarka and Executive Chef Charles Adams.

"I want to thank our District II Rep. Steve (White), District I Rep. Penny (DeVault), our District III Rep LeRoy (Staples Fairbanks III) and Secretary Treasurer Archie LaRose. We were all in full support of this project. It took awhile to come to life but it sure flourished once everyone came together," said Faron Jackson Sr., Leech Lake Tribal Chairman. He continued, "It stands a chance to be a good, prosperous business for Leech Lake and that's what excites me, these opportunities".

"It feels good to be a Leech Laker today. There was no development on this specific site for quite a few years, feedback from the community indicated that most people wanted something to be done with this building. I'd like to say Miigwech to the council for following through on this. We want to put our best foot forward and make this an asset to the community for years to come. Its going to provide jobs, and that is part of building our economy, to help increase the amount of job opportunities available in our area," said District III Representative Leroy Staples Fairbanks III in his remarks.

Shingobee on the Bay is the newest commercial business venture for the Leech Lake Band of Ojibwe. Shingobee on the Bay features a full restaurant, sports bar, convenience store, and off-sale liquor store -- everything you need for your day on the lake!

National Native News Briefs

Tribes slam Trump administration for adding hurdles to land-into-trust process

Tribal leaders are lashing out at the Trump administration again, this time over rule changes they said will make it all but impossible to restore their homelands.

At a crowded listening session in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on October 16, opposition was near unanimous. Tribal leaders repeatedly criticized the Bureau of Indian Affairs for seeking to add more hurdles to the land-into-trust process.

"We're talking about doubling the burden on tribes in an already burdensome process," said Yavapai-Apache Nation Vice Chair Larry Jackson, Sr., who noted that his people's once broad land base has been whittled down to about 1,850 acres in Arizona. "It's about creating a burden on the tribal nations."

Brian Cladoosby, the outgoing president of the National Congress of American Indians, was equally critical. He said the proposal goes against the intent of the Indian Reorganization Act, the law passed by Congress in 1934 to reverse the disastrous effects of the allotment era, during which tribes lost 90 million acres of their territories.

"What I as a tribal leader am seeing is more burdens, more hoops to jump through," asserted Cladoosby, who serves as chairman of the Swinomish Tribe. His community lost out on a huge economic development opportunity in Washington because it took the BIA 10 years to process one land-into-trust application, he said.

John Tahsuda, the "acting" Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, did little at the session to counteract the critiques. He was mostly there to listen to the concerns, though he took a dramatically different view of the changes being proposed.

"To my mind, we are trying to streamline the process," said Tahsuda, a citizen of the Kiowa Tribe who joined the Trump team last month.

Tahsuda, whose official title at the agency is Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, said the proposed rule would create a "two-phased" review for tribes seeking land away from existing reservations. They would be required to submit information about unemployment rates among their people, economic benefits of the potential acquisition to their people, evidence of "cooperative efforts" with nearby local governments and even whether the acquisition would have an economic impact on those communities.

Indian tribes to meet on retrieving more children's remains from Carlisle

Representatives from as many as 59 American Indian tribes will meet next month in Minnesota to discuss the next steps in the repatriation of children's remains from the former Carlisle Indian Industrial School, now the grounds of the Army War College.

A gathering of a large number of tribes would represent a significant broadening of a movement that so far has been intensely pursued by a handful of native nations. The conference follows the August return of the remains of two boys who died at the school, Little Chief and Horse, to their Northern Arapaho people on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming.

To tribes watching events at the cemetery, controlled by the U.S. Army, that repatriation proved the process could work. But the grave of a third boy, Little Plume, contained two sets of remains, neither of them his — a fresh example of the pain that the boarding-school system continues to inflict on native families. It also raised new questions surrounding the burial of nearly 200 native children in Carlisle, Pa.

"There's more that needs to be looked into about the boarding schools — the treatment and care and responsibility that they had to our children, in life and in death," said Christine Diindiisi McCleave, executive officer of the National Native American Boarding School Healing Coalition, the advocacy group sponsoring the meeting.

The nation's first federal off-reservation boarding school, opened in 1879, worked to "civilize" Indian children by erasing their languages, religions, customs, and family bonds. Beatings were a common punishment, and epidemics killed boys and girls already weakened by hard labor. At the time, forcing Indians to assimilate into white society wasn't considered wrong. It was thought to be a more humane alternative than killing them outright.

The Carlisle model spread throughout the United States and Canada, with tens of thousands of Indian children boarded at schools. Some scholars blame the legacy of broken family ties and lost languages for ills that plague modern tribes. American Indian leaders say a haphazard 1927 relocation of the school cemetery created hurtful doubt about who lies beneath the earth — and where.

"Our goal is to reach all the 59 tribes who have children buried in the cemetery to present how the process went for the Arapaho, and start a dialogue for other tribes who may want to repatriate or who would like for their children to stay in the Army's cemetery," Soldier Wolf said. "We need people to know what's going on at Carlisle."

Judge allows Dakota Access pipeline to keep running

A federal judge ruled that the Dakota Access oil pipeline can continue operating while a study is completed to assess its environmental impact on an American Indian tribe.

U.S. District Judge James Boasberg's decision will come as a blow to the Standing Rock Sioux, who have argued that an oil spill from the pipeline under Lake Oahe — from which the tribe draws its water — could have a detrimental effect on the tribal community.

"Today's decision is a disappointing continuation of a historic pattern: Other people get all the profits, and the tribes get all the risk and harm," said Jan Hasselman, an Earthjustice attorney representing the tribe in an ongoing federal lawsuit through which Standing Rock and three other tribes still hope to shut down the pipeline.

Boasberg found that it is likely the Army Corps of Engineers will be able to justify previous decisions made while permitting the pipeline.

"The Corps must simply connect the dots," he said. "This, then, is not a case in which the agency must redo its analysis from the ground up."

Boasberg also acknowledged that shutting down the pipeline would disrupt the energy industry, but said it wasn't a major factor in his decision.

The $3.8 billion pipeline built by Texas-based Energy Transfer Partners has been operating since June 1, moving oil from North Dakota through South Dakota and Iowa to a distribution point in Illinois. From there it can be shipped to the Gulf Coast and potentially lucrative markets abroad. It has the capacity to move half of the oil produced daily in North Dakota, the nation's second-leading producer behind Texas.

Boasberg in June said the Corps didn't adequately consider how an oil spill under the Lake Oahe reservoir on the Missouri River in the Dakotas might affect the Standing Rock Sioux. The tribe is among four that have challenged the pipeline in court over environmental fears that ETP says are unfounded.

In its analysis of the Missouri River crossing, the Corps studied the mostly white demographics in a half-mile (0.8-kilometer) radius, which the agency maintains is standard. But if the agency had gone an additional 88 yards (80 meters) — about the length of a football field — the study would have included the Standing Rock Reservation.

The tribes had proposed a fallback plan if Boasberg decided against a shutdown. It includes increased public reporting of pipeline issues such as repairs, and implementation of a spill response plan — including equipment staging — at Lake Oahe. Boasberg said he will hear arguments on the matter. He scheduled a status conference for Oct. 18.

Bears Ears remains in limbo as Republicans leave tribes out of monument bill

A bill being rushed through Congress is raising alarms in Indian Country about the future of the Bears Ears National Monument and other important places.

The House Committee on Natural Resources approved H.R.3990, the National Monument Creation and Protection Act, in early October without so much as a hearing. The markup came just five days after Rep. Rob Bishop (R-Utah), the chairman of the panel, introduced the bill.

And like one of his prior efforts, Bishop failed to include Indian Country in the so-called CAP Act, which imposes limits on future national monuments and authorizes reductions in existing ones, like Bears Ears in Utah. While the bill recognizes the interests of state and local governments, it leaves out tribal nations altogether.

"Representative Bishop wants to rush this through Congress without a hearing to avoid having a fruitful discussion about the merits of the bill," said Matthew Campbell, a citizen of the Native Village of Gambell and an attorney with the Native American Rights Fund.

The bill is part of an ongoing Republican-led campaign against Bears Ears, leaders of the Navajo Nation said. The monument's name comes from the buttes where Chief Manuelito, who signed the tribe's treaty with the United States in 1868, was born.

Invasive Species Spotlight: Common Buckthorn

Submitted by Katie Zlonis, Botanist and Invasive Species Program Manager, Leech Lake Division of Resource Management

Common buckthorn (Rhamnus cathartica) is a highly invasive tree that, in less than a few decades, has rapidly taken over the understory of many forested areas in southern Minnesota, outcompeting native plants and destroying habitat for wildlife species.

It has been found in a handful of areas on the reservation, including in White Oak.

Plants produce round berries that eventually turn black when they ripen in late summer to early fall. The berries drop under the tree, eventually resulting in a dense understory of buckthorn seedlings. Birds also eat the berries, which aids in spread of this species to new areas. The berries are toxic to humans and animals, having a cathartic effect.

What can you do to help reduce or prevent the spread of buckthorn?

However, common buckthorn is capable of spreading and rapidly invading numerous habitats including upland forest understories, old fields, stream and lake edges, roadsides, and neighborhoods.

Because common buckthorn leaves stay green during late fall and early winter, those seasons are an ideal time to keep an eye out for this species and control or report it.

How can you identify common buckthorn?

Common buckthorn is a shrub or small tree up to 20-30' tall. The bark is brown with silvery corky projections.

Buds and leaves are opposite, or nearly opposite each other on twigs (paired buds and leaves are nearly straight across from each other). Native cherry trees can have bark that appears similar to buckthorn, but cherries have leaves that are alternate along twigs (leaves and buds are not paired directly across from each other).

Common buckthorn twigs often end in a short, sharp thorn about 1/4" long.

Leaves of common buckthorn are egg shaped, dark green, and glossy, with short rounded teeth and 3-5 distinct curved veins that extend from the mid-vein of the leaf to the edge. (see photo on right)

Early detection and control of this species is vital to keep it from spreading. Fall and early winter, when buckthorn is still holding onto its green leaves after other species' have dropped, are the best times to locate plants. If you find common buckthorn on your property, there are several options for controlling it:

Pull: Small seedlings (less than 1/2" diameter) can be pulled directly from the soil. When pulling, try to minimize soil disturbance to prevent common buckthorn or other invasive species' seeds from sprouting in the same area.

Buckthorn leaves, showing 3-5 prominent veins on each side of the midvein of each leaf and small, sharp thorn on twig

Cut and cover the stump: For larger plants, cut the stump near the base and cover it entirely with a tin can or black plastic bag that is fanned out from the base of the tree. You can nail the can to the stump, or if using plastic, stake it to the ground or tie a zip-tie around the bagged stump. The bag or can must be kept in place for at least one year. Buckthorn will resprout vigorously from a cut stump, and this method prevents those sprouts from surviving and reproducing.

If you find a large patch of common buckthorn that is impractical to control using the above techniques, please contact DRM

(contact information below) and we will work with landowners to develop a strategy for controlling buckthorn on their property.

What should you do if you find common buckthorn?

If you think you have found common buckthorn on the reservation, please report this plant to the Division of Resource Management Plants Department 218-335-7442.

If you can provide specific information on location, that can help us identify and work to control new infestations as quickly as possible.

LLTC Student & Faculty Spotlight

Curtis Engen

Bio for Curtis Engen:

Before attending school at Leech Lake Tribal College I lived in Minneapolis. After I moved to the Leech Lake area, I decided to attend college to improve my career opportunities. I had knowledge and skills but not the degree to prove it.

I started the Carpentry program at LLTC in 2015. It's been a real joy taking classes and working with the instructors. Of course, it was a joy for them, as well. The instructors have been very helpful as this college is more one-on-one oriented. Help was available to improve my math skills and to help me develop a direction for my career.

The skills and knowledge I have gained as a carpentry student will help me get a higher paying job in the field that I'm interested in pursuing.

For anyone interested in making a living in carpentry, or any other field, I highly recommend LLTC. I'm sure they are going to miss my sense of humor when I graduate in December. It has been suggested that I continue my education here. I'm thinking, maybe, maybe not! I feel like the door is wide open, and I'm not sure which direction to run.

Rocky Carpenter

My family is from White Earth. My mother was very young and extremely poor when she had me; we lived mostly in the Bemidji and Cass Lake areas. My father was a carpenter, my step father was a carpenter and I totally resisted carpentry growing up. I went to college for graphic design and drafting. When I realized that graphic designing was all about pushing products via corporate agendas, I became disenchanted quickly.

I returned to the carpentry that I grew up with and started to make money by using my skills. After many, many mistakes and successes, I took my general contractor exam 20 years ago and started my own carpentry business in Minneapolis and Los Angeles. Again, I found myself disenchanted by "the rat race" pace of a big city and how I was locked in by concrete and exhaust fumes. Something was being lost and I was losing touch with my connection to nature. So, I left.

I was hired at Leech Lake Tribal College over 13 years ago. I mentored with Clem Nason and AC Northbird, who were the carpentry instructors at the time. I was very scared that I wouldn't be taken seriously since I am a woman. But, soon it became very clear that my love of research and the science behind building was coming through as my best asset. Information is key. All of us have different skills and abilities but the information doesn't discriminate.

I came to teach at a time in building history where energy concerns and building codes were changing drastically. The tools to test how building components worked as a system were new to all carpenters; devices such as blower doors, infrared cameras and moisture meters revolutionized our industry because it provided hard evidence that homes were being built without a systems approach.

We build houses with a Low Energy Design Plan in mind. That is, we value low energy consumption, passive solar orientation, low resource use and simple construction for the longevity of the structure and occupant's health.

Saul Saucedo

I joined the LLTC faculty team this fall semester.

I'm currently teaching four classes.

- Framing Sustainable Design: This subject covers the rough framing of residential carpentry; from floor, wall, ceiling, and roof systems.
- Footings And Foundation: This class entails the various foundation systems used in residential construction, from slab at grade to full basements. We also analyze the different soil composition and site conditions.
- Weatherization: This course views the dwelling through the lens of Building Science. It analyzes the dynamics between the inhabitants, mechanical systems, and the environment, and how the elements influence the balance between them.
- Welding: This class is offered to students through the collaboration of LLTC residential carpentry and the Red Lake Oshkiimaajitahdah Welding program. It's a weeklong intensive class where students are exposed to the fundamentals of the welding world as part of the one year residential carpentry diploma.

I see teaching as a world of endless possibilities where someone can acquire a skill and forge a career, a future, and being part of that dream is priceless.

We are in the first stage of building a two bedroom home right on campus for a local resident.

In an attempt to apply building science, this house is planned to be an energy efficient dwelling. It will utilize weatherization techniques: air sealing, three pane high performance windows, double exterior wall to minimize thermal bridging and increase insulation levels, and passive solar design through building orientation to increase total energy efficiency.

Leech Lake Tribal College's Carpentry Program

Giwaakaa'igemin "We build"

Leech Lake Tribal College offers a one year Carpentry Diploma and a two year Associate of Applied Science degree.

The Residential Carpentry diploma program is a two semester commitment in residential construction. LLTC faculty will prepare students in the process and methods used in the installation and maintenance of structures through project based learning.

The Integrated Residential Builder (IRB) A.A.S degree program is a holistic response to climate change, energy poverty and the disappearance of our natural resources. We train our students to use building science, renewable energy and a whole house systems approach to construction, while preserving our Ojibwe core values. The IRB program builds upon the Residential Carpentry diploma and is geared towards those who are interested in a multi-discipline approach to construction. Graduates of the IRB A.A.S. program will have working knowledge of a variety of sustainable energy technologies including solar, permaculture design, building envelope, and heating/ cooling system alternatives.

His great interest was "Wrestling" or "Rassling" as he put it, never missing a match or a pay per view, he was a great fan!!! Never missed his nature shows either, he loved watching the animals.

Dad was a very religious man and made sure his kids were educated about the church and its meanings. He took the teachings and his faith seriously and would pray every day for my mom and his family. He took great comfort in his faith and it guided him during his life.

Sadly, Dad left us on September 18, 2017 after a long illness. He will join our mother Mary Lou, his son Donald "Bud", his parents Joseph and Mary, brothers and sisters, Snuffy, Abbott, Shirley, Joanne and Mary Jo, and also many aunts, uncles, cousins and friends.
